- Re local academic trac:

- Thank you; exactly what I sought.
- Some questions, for response next week:

- How many of these persons are already college grads?
 - B.A.?
 - M.A.?
- How many are ⁱⁿ clerical jobs?
- How many are blacks?
- What is the justification for the five PSG persons who are taking accounting courses?

ATTN: SUBJ: College-Level Course in Accounting
Roger: You had asked for some additional words on our rationale for sending people to a college-level course in accounting. Some knowledge of accounting is a stock in trade for many computer professionals, not only for business applications, but also for information handling applications. Consequently, it is a requisite in many ADP academic programs. For example, the CEIR course in Systems Design which I took some years ago had the following course blocks: Math Refresher (no credit); Hardware (3 credits); Software (3 credits); Modern Math (3 credits); Statistics (3 credits); Accounting (2 credits); Human Factors (2 credits); Management (2 credits); Operations Research (3 credits); and, Systems Design Workshop (5 credits). We have encouraged our professional and technical personnel to seek self-improvement, and have offered to assist them through tuition payments for job-related courses. We have made it clear, particularly to our non-college grads, that their off-duty endeavors at self-improvement are a consideration in future advancement. As I recall, four of the five who are taking accounting this fall are non-college grads working on Data Processing Systems Certificates. Two semesters (six credit hours) of Accounting are required for this certificate. Ted SIGNATURE
